Pelias Pelias Bosnia and Herzegovina On the long coastline of the Adriatic Sea, at the place where the Ibar and Dinaric Alps meet, Bosnia and Herzegovina is split by the Dinaric ridge. This mountain area, forming a natural bridge between the two main territories of this country, is characterised by the presence of many lakes and rivers, and by its mountainous character. The majority of Bosnia and Herzegovina's population is clustered in the three main cities Sarajevo, Banja Luka and Tuzla. Outstanding Universal Value Brief synthesis

Bosnia and Herzegovina is one of the most geographically diverse countries in Europe, with the highest mountain range in the world, the Dinaric Alps. Although located on the Adriatic Coast it is an inland country, separating the Mediterranean and Sava landscapes, with the Adriatic Sea forming the natural and cultural border with Croatia. The Dinaric ridge runs along the western side of the country, with the main mountain range Bosna extending from the northern parts of the country to the west. Mountain climate prevails over most of the country, and the road network is meagre. The geographical features of this rugged terrain divide the country into three parts, and the majority of the population live in the coastal plains and hinterland, although the capital and second city, Banja Luka, is mainly situated in the area of the central highlands. In the north lies the coastal plain, extending over approximately 25 000 sq km. This region lies largely under the control of the country's capital, Sarajevo, with irrigated agricultural land along the river Bosna. National parks dominate the area, especially around the medieval town of Mostar, which lies in the heart of the Prekmurje region on the river Drava. The Adriatic coast and southern hinterland, divided from the rest of the country by Bosnia and Herzegovina's mountainous hinterland, constitutes the most densely populated region, with a landscape dominated by the Adriatic Sea and its islands, forests and lakes. The hinterland is the heart of Bosnia and Herzegovina's industrialisation, with more f30f4ceada
