Ankle sprains are a common sport-related injury that require prolonged treatment to return the patient to normal function. A mechanical lateral ankle sprain is the most common mechanism of injury. In this clinical trial, we designed a programmable orthotic, which was designed to provide adjustable external compression at the ankle joint, for patients with a lateral ankle sprain. To evaluate the efficacy of this design in patients with lateral ankle sprain. Single-blind, randomized controlled trial. Outpatient clinic. Patients with a lateral ankle sprain with an absence of fracture. We enrolled a total of 40 patients and randomly assigned them to a custom-made orthotic (n = 20) or a control group (n = 20). All patients received routine clinical care in addition to the orthotic. The functional status was evaluated using the Ankle-Knee Outcome Survey; this was assessed at baseline and 6 weeks after the initiation of treatment. We also assessed ankle range of motion, muscle strength, and pressure sensation in the ankle. Pain on walking was also assessed. At 6 weeks after initiation of treatment, ankle-ankle dorsiflexion range of motion improved significantly in the orthotic group but not in the control group. Pain on walking was also significantly lower in the orthotic group. The ankle-knee Outcome Survey scores were significantly better in the orthotic group. Our results show that application of an orthotic that provides adjustable external compression at the ankle joint is superior in terms of pain on walking, ankle dorsiflexion range of motion, and ankle-knee Outcome Survey scores. A modified version of this orthotic may be applied in the outpatient clinic after 6 weeks of rest. "In my eyes, it's the end of the era." The actor and director Mike Leigh responded yesterday to rumours that he is stepping down from the production of his latest movie. "I love what I do," said Leigh, speaking on the eve of the Los Angeles premiere of Mr Turner.
