Even after its release in Japan in September 2015, ELDEN RING released to an overwhelmingly positive reaction from people who played the original. As a result, the game will also be released in the overseas market. In the game, when you encounter an enemy monster, the KI of the monster attacks you. However, while you are able to take on the monster's attacks in one-on-one combat, you can also choose to decide its form with the power of the Gythian Sword that you obtain through combat, and with strength bestowed to you by the Goddess. We are currently hard at work improving the game, and we intend to release a version that is roughly one year from now. We are discussing with the overseas company that we have invested in, and are also being in touch with various parties that we may be able to cooperate with. Meanwhile, we will do our best to provide good service. On October 13th, 2016, we will be holding a special theme on LINE announcing the official date of release (with the exception of the US). We will be able to provide more details regarding the details such as the contents, merchandise, and other related information at that time.

Image: Nippon Ichi Software, Inc. The present invention relates to a new and distinct cultivar of Sanvitalia plant, botanically known as Sanvitalia persica and hereinafter referred to by the name 'Due4sur'. The new Sanvitalia plant is a product of a planned breeding program conducted by the Inventors in Stuttgart, Germany. The objective of the breeding program is to create new strong, vigorous Sanvitalia plants with numerous attractive flowers. The new Sanvitalia plant originated from a cross-pollination made by the Inventors in June, 2010 in Stuttgart, Germany of a proprietary selection of Sanvitalia persica identified as code number K0004-10, not patented, as the female, or seed, parent with a proprietary selection of Sanvitalia persica identified as code number K0000-05, not patented, as the male, or pollen, parent. The new Sanvitalia plant was discovered and selected by the Inventors as a single flowering plant from within the progeny of the stated cross-pollination in a controlled greenhouse environment in Stuttgart, Germany in May, 2012. Asexual reproduction of the new Sanvitalia plant by vegetative tip cuttings in a controlled greenhouse environment in Hei, Germany since May, 2012 has shown that the unique features of this new Sanvitalia plant are stable and reproduced true to type in successive generations. This invention relates to a planar antenna of the type used for receiving or transmitting radio frequency or infrared energy. Such antennas are commonly employed, for example, to receive satellite-transmitted television signals or to modulate or transmit signals in a medium such as the earth. The antenna is often mounted on a base or is placed on a table, or is suspended from a structure such as the roof or wall of a building. Such an antenna may be a coil or an active (transmitting) antenna. Conventionally, the planar antennas are planar or rectangular, i.e., the area, or major axis is equal to the minor axis. The antenna may be placed on a ground plane on a table or on the top of a building for receiving waves from a satellite, or the antenna may be on the roof of a building for receiving waves from a satellite or for a base station.
