...I have to say that I haven't bought a new RPG in almost 20 years and that I played through the new one right up until R2 just to see what it was like (big thanks to the people at the local chain bookstores for giving me time for this hobby!). I even watched the original trailers and demos on a plane in the middle of nowhere so I could remember it right after the game comes out. This whole thing reminds me of the old Dark Souls games. I remember seeing the original trailer and was blown away. What I realized was that "action RPG" was how I defined games like Zelda/Phantasy Star/Final Fantasy, the type where you level up, set out on a journey to save the world and beat bosses for experience points. I'd just never played those types of games so I went to experience a new type of game and found a whole new world of interesting game mechanics. It's weird how, while the industry has shifted to more casual, mobile, and fast paced action/brawler game styles, I still prefer the slower games where you level up, explore a huge world, beat bosses for experience, and then go on a set journey to save the world. The way the worlds were built felt like the landscapes of Link's world and the huge cityscape on the original game. I am not sure if the game is going to be like that, but so far I am really happy with the direction the game is headed. It was so amazing to see that there was another genre that I couldn't play but that I didn't even realize existed. In other news, the game looks absolutely gorgeous! The game looks and sounds incredible. The music, the character models, the world.. everything. It's just beautiful. I am curious if the characters from the game are going to be voiced in English or Japanese since it is set in the Lands Between, I can understand why they would have English in the game considering it is such a huge movie/live action series, but I am still
