No technical skills required! Monday, February 4, 2008 With the HTML5 as default the image tag with the alt attribute is now a keyword. With best browser, the alt attribute will be translated into the image title, and therefore the image will be displayed with his alt attribute content. Then the best thing is probably a semantic architecture. The best thing is already here: the HTML5 web application using the image tag. Monday, January 28, 2008 Today I discovered HTML5. This new standard is really mature. Furthermore, browsers are implementing it in various ways and bringing it to browsers are very old. This is true also for mobile devices that are also evolving to the HTML5 world. The challenges are the same as for desktop browsers. Try this very interesting tutorial to bring a functional web application to an HTML5 environment. The tutorial shows how we can use advanced features of HTML5 like the standard document.createElementNS() to create new HTML5 elements. Friday, January 18, 2008 HTML5: What's Next for the Web? by Theodore Until recently, the Web was a string of HTML documents. When a browser visited a Web site, it downloaded a Web page with content, and the browser presented that content to the user. These days, though, Web sites can include client-side scripts that execute functions in the browser. When a browser visits a Web page, it may include a client-side script that performs some functions on the Web site that didn't exist before. For

Email & RSS Feed Overall, a wonderful and useful browser feature that has become a standard for all modern browsers, and has been added to Safari too. Google Chrome also supports a full-featured address bar, but you need to download the Chrome browser if you don't already have it. Replacing the home page The New Tab page has been eliminated in recent versions of Chrome. The tab titles that were previously displayed by default are now hidden by default and your home page will be shown instead. You will need to select "Show the Home button" from the options menu, otherwise, the home page will not appear. To customize the home page, click on the three vertical dots on the far right of the browser and choose "Change Home Page". Chrome will display several options. You can create a website from a file or from the "Add a page" option and use that website as your home page instead. You can also add any shortcut to a website from the "Add an app" option and that shortcut will be used as your home page. You can enter a custom URL and that will be used in its place. Clicking the home page thumbnail will display the current home page. You can click on the "More homepage" button to change your home page to a URL you specify. You can also enter a shortcut to an address to display your home page there. To turn off the display of your home page, uncheck the "Show the Home button" checkbox. You can also change the order of the options by clicking on the "Home Settings" button, next to that, and clicking "Change the order of the homepage links". By default, the first option is "Show a favicon" which displays a small image in the status bar to the right of the address bar. You can change it to "Show the Home button", "Show the favicon", "Show the site's name" or "
