For example, a user can watch a short video before making a purchase. I want this video to be displayed when the user comes back later - in the webapp's cache, for use in offline browsing. Is there a reliable way to achieve this, using HTML5, server side or cookies? A: You can use HTML5 Application Cache. You'll need to setup the manifest file, in which you'll set the time to live for the resources. application-name.website.com manifest=application-name.website.com.manifest Once you have that, any visited URL can be cached for a certain period of time using Cache-Control: private header, and should support HTTP 304 (Not Modified) response, which is a valid HTTP response code for cached content, so if the user comes back, the resource will be
