In the conventional PDP, however, it is very difficult to manufacture electrodes that are sufficiently transparent for visible light. Accordingly, the conventional PDP exhibits poor transmissivity for visible light. Further, the conventional PDP operates at a driving voltage of about 500 V. When driving the conventional PDP, it is necessary to have driving circuits each having a voltage-boosting capability greater than that of the driving voltage. It is, therefore, difficult to drive the conventional PDP with a simple or thin driving circuit. Accordingly, a method for manufacturing a transparent, thin display panel and method for driving the display panel with a simple driving circuit have been desired.Q: Is there any 'advice' on when to use strace/strace -e When I'm debugging a process, I often find myself using strace in order to get a close-up view of what the process is doing. For example, I might run the following: $ strace -o strace.out -f -e trace=process foo It allows me to see exactly what is being called, for example: $ sort strace.out -t: | head ioctl(3, SNDCTL_AUDIO, 0x20) = 0 read(7, "power_supply: ", 55)
