November 1, The Wall Street Journal has an interesting article discussing the likely impact of the new rules on the allocation of capital. The basic idea is that as the new rules will allow brokers to trade in fund shares on a public exchange (which is not currently allowed) they will not be able to use a "revenue-weighted" investment approach. Under this scenario, the idea is that the fund managers who are best at generating revenue will be put in a position to attract shares from the clients who generate more revenue. That is because they can get a better return on their money than the brokers who have a poorer "performance" record but are trying to be more efficient in their investment. While the article highlights the exact opposite of what we think will happen - which is that the worst fund managers will get the 79a2804d6b
