YoungStaff writer of The Christian Science Monitor / June 17, 2004 CAMBRIDGE, MASS. Did the Catechism of the Catholic Church on the sixth commandment mislead Mary into thinking that masturbation is a sin? Or did it simply not provide enough detail? At issue is the catechism's statement that "to masturbate is to intentionally touch the genitals for the purpose of exciting and putting to shame a sexual urge that is properly natural to one's own body." It appears to be little more than a legalistic mouthful of words to the average lay person. But it can be used as an indictment by the Vatican against some who practice "lustful" masturbation, says Father Edward Beck, an ethicist at the Weston Jesuit School of Theology, Cambridge, Mass. "This is a church document, and a serious document. It's not a comic book." Comparison of laboratory and questionnaire results in the assessment of tobacco and drug use in schoolchildren. This study compares results from self-administered questionnaire and laboratory measurements of tobacco and drug use in the same schoolchildren. The children were 3rd, 6th and 9th grade public school students (n = 3,858) from four high schools in Santa Clara County. They completed a questionnaire in their classrooms. The questionnaire included questions about their personal, school, and family factors, and items about drug use, cigarette smoking, and alcohol drinking. Venous blood samples were collected for analysis of salivary cotinine and benzoylecgonine. The questionnaire was revised before a second administration. The revised questionnaire was administered in the students' classrooms and then in their homes, 3 months later. The same laboratory methods were used to analyze cotinine in the blood and benzoylecgonine in saliva. Although few differences were observed in the responses to the two questionnaires, the estimated prevalences of self-reported drug use were systematically higher than those based on cotinine. There was a high degree of correlation between questionnaire and laboratory results for all three grades. Tobacco and alcohol consumption were better estimated by the questionnaire. The questionnaire underestimated smoking among girls and overestimated drug use among boys, and underestimated binge drinking among both sexes. Despite the risk of bias, the questionnaire can be a reliable tool for the estimation of drug use in the schoolchildren. It can also help in prioritizing prevention and treatment activities in order to maximize impact and decrease cost.

Medecins Sans Frontieres (MSF) began the task of providing this medical assistance in 1981. This paper reports the results of its effort in the first 10 years of its work in Israel. Let's talk about Code of Conduct. We have a set of rules that codify our values and behavior. Why is it so important to enforce them? We are human and sometimes we violate them. For developers,
