Although it may seem unbelievable, considering the number of announcements that came with Lightroom 5 (and how big the upgrade to build is), the Lightroom team didn't forget to offer plenty of additional news in other parts of the suite. Photoshop, which will be released announcement later than Lightroom, seems to be developing smoothly. That has always been its central advantage. Whether that's true or not remains to be seen. Things I am confident of: Photoshop is going to improve its abilities a lot, and, most importantly, it is going to be fun doing it. Lightroom 5 on the other hand, depends on how Photoshop will turn out. In general, Adobe has a great track record. I for one am very enthusiastic to see how Lightroom 5 ties with the "big numbers" that Photoshop decided for today. How about you? If you use Lightroom as your main image editing tool in one or multiple workflows, you'll be glad to hear that Lightroom 5 has some very useful and helpful new features. Here are some highlights: Most of the Lightroom 5's most important usability and workflow enhancements have been around for quite some time. But even when you already know how to use the major L5 features, you'll find them to be even more effective and convenient. And, now that Lightroom 5 is released, it's a great opportunity to polish your workflows. Though Lightroom 5 is worth considering for more than just that. It's a great opportunity to step up your skills in general, and a great practice ground to experiment with new ideas.

When you create a new layer, you can label it as either a mask or a channel layer. To create a channel layer, type /C. The next section explains how to use mask layers. Path layers replicate traditional vector-based illustration, such as the illustration an artist might draw or paint in a vector-based application. You can create paths with the pen tool, which is found in the toolbox at the bottom of the screen. You can also create paths by dragging paths or images into the path area that's located between the pencil tool and the eraser tool. If you create a new layer, you can choose from three mask types: None, Source-In, and Destination-Out. To create a new mask, type /Mn or press Option-N. With a mask layer, you can perform image-editing operations on an image. A mask layer can only be modified using masking tools, but it can contain many different objects. For example, you can apply a mask to a foreground object in a photo or to make adjustments to a selection. Initially, you can use the eraser tool to remove parts of the mask, such as a black hole in the center of a star or a bright patch of color. Different mask types are classified as follows:
